

Appleby Archaeology UPDATE

August 1999

News

Appleby Archaeology Group is officially on holiday during August but this month is traditionally the busiest of the archaeological year. Most research excavations are scheduled to coincide with the good weather that the Summer promises. Members of Appleby Archaeology group have also taken to the fields this month to investigate an ancient earthwork running underneath the present field system near Flakebridge, Appleby. The bank survives in some form for some 1.5 miles (surveyed so far) despite being ploughed out in places by human action and by pigs! There is still work to do before the bank can be fully explained and further days are planned.

Eden Historic Landscape Project has been launched as an offshoot of Appleby Archaeology Group concerned with research and training. The project is being supported by a Millennium Award with the aim of researching the history of the landscape around Appleby and providing practical training and experience in archaeology. Details will be posted to members as the project progresses.

Tom Clare who is known to many members as a past County Archaeologist and through his book "Archaeological Sites of the Lake District", will be visiting Appleby to give a talk in October. Tom is also running a project to investigate villages in the Eden valley and has extended an invitation to members to take part. Details are included with the newsletter and Tom should be contacted direct if you wish to contribute.

January may seem a long way off but we are planning to host another Member's Evening and will be looking for people to give short talks on their chosen subjects. Now is a good time to start planning for a talk! If you need any help please get in touch. I can now be contacted with regard to research or Appleby Archaeology group at 5 Bridge Street most Tuesdays. Martin Railton
